A boy in a world of building stones and magic Von Ein Kunde A little boy (slightly selfish as most humans are) hates his gouvernante (something like an all day teacher). Fortunately, he has the unique talent to build wonderful towns out of building blocks. One night, in a magical moment, he enters his newest creation. Will he be able to get out before the gouvernante takes it apart? This story is so imaginative and full of interesting ideas. It also has a little morale at the end but the reader never notices. That is Edith Nesbit for you. The very first writer who wrote books FOR children and not about them. I simply loved it when I was a child and I still do although I'm way over 30 now. I can only recommend it to anyone. 0 von 0 Kunden fanden die folgende Rezension hilfreich. nice one Von Stefanie Bruning A childrens' book about a boy who builds cities from everything that comes to hand and finds himself transported to his last work.

Kurzbeschreibung"Philip had no one but his sister, and she had no one but Philip. Their parents were dead, and Helen, who was twenty years older than Philip and was really his half-sister, was all the mother he had ever known. And he had never envied other boys their mothers, because Helen was so kind and clever and dear. She gave up almost all her time to him; she taught him all the lessons he learned; she played with him, inventing the most wonderful new games and adventures. So that every morning when Philip woke he knew that he was waking to a new day of joyous and interesting happenings. And this went on till Philip was ten years old, and he had no least shadow of a doubt that it would go on for ever."From School Library JournalGrade 1-3-Philip and Lucy are transported into a magic city he built from toys. All are threatened with disaster if the children can't save them through valiant deeds. By E.
